

SLHF NEWS

■ Walk & Talk: Join us to explore some of the history of Linlithgow from Mary Queen of Scots (and before) to the twentieth century (and beyond) on Thursday, 22 May 2025, 10.30am – 3.30pm. In the morning, we will take a short walk along the east end of the High Street stopping to examine evidence of the town's history from the sixteenth century to the present day. In the afternoon, we plan to explore the interior of St Michael's Church before taking a walk around The Peel, the Royal Park that surrounds Linlithgow Palace, to explore the history evident from this vantage point. Cost £7 (lunch not included). For further information and to book go to Linlithgow Walk and Talk | Scottish Local History Forum

■ Call for Papers Scottish Local History Forum is planning to hold a conference in October 2025 on the theme of Popular Protest in a Scottish Local History Context and would welcome offers of thirty minute papers. Please visit Contact SLHF | Scottish Local History Forum to discuss possible contributions.

■ Congratulations are due to former SLHF trustee, Finlay McKichan. He has received a President's Award in recognition of his 50 years of dedication at the Aberdeen and District Members' Centre of the National Trust for Scotland.

■ Your Clish-Clash editor attended the Fife Local History Forum get-together on 13 November to promote the advantages of membership of SLHF for individuals and organisations. He heard some very interesting presentations and met old friends, former colleagues and stallholders representing various Fife groups. The splendid Kirkcaldy Old Kirk was the venue and they heard about the cutting edge, virtual reality re-creation of the Old Kirk and Environs, c.1500, created by the School of Computer Science, University of St Andrews using gaming technology. They also heard about the Scottish Council on Archives' Community Stories, Community Archives project and the new Your Scottish Archives portal (see details in Libraries, Archives and Museums section). The newly launched Kilmany, Creich and Flisk newsletter/magazine was an excellent case study Creich, Flisk, and Kilmany Historical Group and was followed up with good advice on how local history groups can work along with the press to their advantage as they have done in Dunfermline.

The last talk was about the Eco-Museum of Scottish Mining – a virtual museum exploring the rich but often hidden local landscape legacies of coal mining across the Scottish midland coalfield, ranging from Fife to Ayrshire, through a series of cycling and walking routes created by local communities commemorating their industrial history and heritage, and celebrating their sense of place and identity. ■ Call for submissions: Digital collections. Community Archives & Heritage Group are looking for people to submit posters or digital files to be displayed at their upcoming event on the 10th of March taking place in the ARC, Glasgow. This is an opportunity to showcase digital collections and digital projects you are undertaking or planning to undertake! Find out more and submit here:

<https://www.scottisharchives.org.uk/latest/workshops-events/call-for-contributions-digital-collections/>

■ Community Stories - Community Archives Events The next series CS-CA events are now all listed on Scottish Council on Archive's Eventbrite. They cover a range of topics including Cataloguing, Engaging Outreach and Preservation and there will also be several in-person events too. To book your space head to Eventbrite: <https://www.eventbrite.co.uk/o/scottish-council-on-archives-18070269599>

■ Your Scottish Archives In December SCA launched the Your Scottish Archives Portal. YSA is a unique project to gather and make available worldwide, through a dynamic online portal, catalogue descriptions from archives across Scotland, including local authority, health, business and community archives, as well as records of under-represented groups. This major new resource is managed by SCA in partnership with Jisc/Archives Hub. It will build capacity amongst archive holders and develop skills, particularly amongst local communities, making an enormous contribution to the wider heritage sector by improving access to Scotland's documented past.

YSA currently displays catalogue entries from over sixty Scottish repositories, including local authorities, universities, heritage organisations and community groups. It is packed with guidance, links and resources for all users of online archives, both experienced and new. This is phase one of the site. Phase two in spring 2025 will include improved hierarchical display of records and search functionality. As the site grows, we hope more repositories will contribute catalogue descriptions. See Your Scottish Archives - Explore and discover archive collections across Scotland and for all comments and questions please email your@scottisharchives.org.uk

■ A Year in the Life of a Community Archive 2024: The Museum of Scottish Railways The Museum of Scottish Railways Archive final blogs for a Year in the Life of a Community Archive are now on the SCA website! The Museum of Scottish Railways discuss winning CAHG's 'Bringing Archives to Life' short film grant which will enable them to purchase equipment, undertake training with professional filmmakers, and create a short format film to showcase the people who make their archive special, and what they get out of volunteering. They also look back on their experience doing A Year in the Life by going through the wide range of benefits and opportunities they gained. They also discuss what is to come in 2025 for them after the project. Read the blogs here: <https://www.scottisharchives.org.uk/community-archives/a-year-in-the-life-of-a-community-archive-2024/>

■ Scotland's Museums and Galleries Strategy Symposium 2025 will take place on Wednesday, 26 February 2025 at The Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh and online. This event is open to all those who volunteer, work in, and collaborate with Scotland's museums and galleries. It offers an excellent opportunity to learn about sector initiatives, engage with topical discussions, and network with colleagues. Cabinet Secretary for the Constitution, External Affairs and Culture Angus Robertson MSP will deliver the opening address before a panel discussion with colleagues from the museum sector where they will explore shared challenges and opportunities for the future. This will be followed by various panel sessions, knowledge-sharing opportunities, and workshops designed to provide inspiration and practical advice across the priority areas of the Strategy. ■ The Wellgate Project: Recreating a Lost Street Wellgate was one of the most important streets in Dundee. It was an integral part of the social and commercial fabric of the city, with a history going back over 500 years, and was home to many well-known shops and businesses in that time. Now, fifty years on from its demolition in the 1970s, this project aims to tell its story and is looking for help to do that. The Wellgate Project | Leisure & Culture Dundee

■ National Library of Scotland map news The latest issue of the Scottish Maps Forum's Cairt newsletter was published in January 2025. This featured two larger research articles, the first by Nevis Hulme, on using maps and related written sources to locate Ingadill, a lost name in Gairloch, Wester Ross. A second article, by Douglas Lockhart, described the interesting life of John Innes (1769-1845) of Aberdeen. Few land surveyors have a portrait; even fewer have a ship named after them, and Douglas's research explains why! This issue also reported on recent machine-learning projects which have identified features on maps. Those relating to Scotland include:

- Moorland in Scotland, 1840s-1880s
- Urban trees in Edinburgh and Leeds, 1888-94
- Woodland in Scotland, 1840s-1880s.

Further information about these is available at: <https://maps.nls.uk/projects/> and Cairt is available at <https://maps.nls.uk/cairt/cairt46.pdf>

■ Bibliography of the Historical Cartography of Scotland This Bibliography, compiled by John Moore, was originally published over 40 years ago with just 238 entries, but John has continually maintained and expanded it since then. Now including over 770 references to articles relating specifically to maps and map-makers of Scotland, it has been made newly available online. It is possible to search by author, subject, and keyword, as well as browse the Bibliography through chronological, thematic and geographic sections. Informed descriptions and summaries accompany each citation. Further details: <https://maps.nls.uk/guides/hist-cart-scot/>

■ Other online map additions:

OS One-Inch 'Old Series', England and Wales, 1800-1860s (746 sheets). Ordnance Survey's very earliest published maps of England and Wales, of great value in predating the OS six-inch and 25-inch mapping by several decades: <https://maps.nls.uk/os/one-inch-old-series/>

■ SLHF has been contacted recently by Alex Dodd, Hidden Histories Trainee working on the Scottish Co-operative Discovery Centre (SCDC) project in West Calder, supported by the National Lottery Heritage Fund. The project celebrates the rich history of Scotland's Co-operative movement, focusing on uncovering its hidden stories and showcasing its impact on communities nationwide. The project workers are especially keen to highlight the contributions of underrepresented groups such as women, disabled individuals, and members of the LGBTIQQ community, aiming to create a more inclusive narrative of this important movement. SCDC is seeking stories, photographs, and objects from individuals and organizations connected to Scotland's Co-operative movement. Contributions like these will be vital in preserving this history for future generations. Interested individuals can contact Alex at hiddenhistories@westcalder.org or connect with SCDC through its Facebook page: Memories of Scotland's Co-operatives (Facebook). Get in touch for more information about the project or to find out how SCDC is working to celebrate Scotland's local history.

■ A new project is bringing fresh life to Glasgow's past – through a rock band. The Tenementals are a group of academics and musicians who aim to use their songs to tell the 'radical history' of the city. The band telling the history of a city by songs - BBC News

■ The Dendrochronology Research Framework for Scotland is the first update to the Archaeological Science section of ScARF since 2012. This new framework showcases how dendrochronology has many applications both within and beyond cultural heritage not just as a method of dating wood. This resource embraces the wider applications of tree-ring science to include sections on dendroclimatology, dendroecology and dendro-isotopes as well as sections on dendrochronology in archaeology, standing buildings and landscape history.

WATCH & LISTEN

■ On Channel 4 and available to stream is The Soldiers That Saved Britain where journalist and film maker Mobeen Azhar uncovers the story of his grandfather who served among 2.5 million men of the British Indian Army during the Second World War. His journey takes him from his home town of Huddersfield to rural Scotland where a unit of Indian soldiers served during the war. <https://tinyurl.com/586ub8kt>

■ On the same channel but completely different is Mysteries of Loch Ness which explores the history, science and folklore that surround it. Featuring contributions from believers, sceptics, tourists and locals as well as an academic who considers the psychology behind supposed sightings of 'Nessie'. The programme also takes a look at similar legends around the world. <https://www.channel4.com/programmes/mysteries-of/on-demand/77014-002>

■ The Gift on BBC Radio 4 offers perhaps a slight detour from the theme of local history. Its focus is where presenter Jenny Kleeman talks to people whose lives have been changed irrevocably after they received home DNA kits. The words 'You may learn information about yourself that you do not anticipate' reads the warning on the test kit—often an understatement. It's fair to say that in this second series in some cases the gift of a home DNA kit seems truly to be a poisoned chalice. <https://www.bbc.co.uk/sounds/brand/p0gd2dgb>

■ Elsewhere on Radio 3 is a very interesting 5-part series called The Essay: Scotland Rocks. Scottish poet Kenneth Steven turns his gaze to Scotland's geology including gemstones in various parts of the country including Angus and Fife and the island of Iona where Kenneth found his first gemstone.

■ In The Stay at Home Soldiers Military historian Colonel John Hughes-Wilson presents the story of the men and women who served in the Home Guard during the Second World War and beyond. It features unique archive recordings and interviews. Volunteers were aged between 17 and 65, hitting a peak of 1,700,000 members in 1943. The programme uses unique archive recordings, interviews and surviving male and female Home Guards. It also enlists the services of the Chatham Home Guard re-enactors in a bid to tell the story of 'The Real Dad's Army'.

■ Since 2012, the History of Parliament has been interviewing former members of the House of Commons in order to capture personal reflections of lives lived in parliament. Including participants from across the three major parties and ranging in both period of service and length of tenure, findings and insights from this landmark research project have already been showcased in journal articles, a book and numerous articles on its website. <https://www.historyofparliamentonline.org/> Now, for the first time, they have collated clips and excerpts from these interviews into a six-part podcast series. Hosted by Dr Emma Peplow, Head of Contemporary British History at the History of Parliament Trust, and Dr Alex Lock, historian and curator at the British Library, this podcast spotlights some of the brilliant interviews within the 200+ strong archive, using never before heard clips and highlighting the unique insights that oral history interviews provide. These insights cover not only the various milestones of a political career, such as the motivation to get involved in politics, joining a party, finding a seat and encounters with the Whips Office, but also the emotional effect political careers can have on personal lives, as well as the experience of historically underrepresented MPs who have found their way onto the green benches. Featuring clips from interviews with Ann Widdecombe, Michael Heseltine, Chris Smith, Helene Hayman and more, this podcast offers a unique insight into life in Parliament at the end of the twentieth century and beginning of the twenty-first. What drove these individuals to enter political life? How did they secure their seat or win an election? And what impact did this job have on their personal life? Find out in 'Tales from the Green Benches: An Oral History of Parliament'.
